

The insight behind the route

- Our research strongly suggested that emotional appeals are more likely to change the attitudes and behaviours of vaccine hesitant individuals.
- Two strong emotional drivers identified were:
  - Georgians' universal desire to move forwards, not backwards. Many are worried that restrictions will be reimposed and they'll be forced back into isolation. They want the cycle to end and to get 'back to normal' once and for all.
  - Georgians want to protect the people they care about (for most, their immediate friends and family). They want to feel they are doing the best they can for them. They're worried about how further restrictions will impact them.
- The Government of Georgia is keen to emphasise the gravity of people not getting vaccinated – from a health, economic and social perspective.
  - e.g. the number of lives lost, health appointments missed (non-COVID-related illnesses), jobs lost, business closures, missed school days etc.
- 'Let's not go back' provides a vehicle to deliver this serious messaging (i.e. reminding Georgians what is at stake by referencing the hardships of past waves) as well as tapping into these emotional drivers and positioning the vaccine as the only pathway to normalcy.
